

INDIAN 1984

As the day dawns and the brilliance of the sun streams across the sky, Riverwood High School is awakened as the beauty of a Monday morning unfolds. The clusters of heavily scented honeysuckle vines clinging to the trees, surrounded by velvety green splendor and draped with thin wispy spanish moss, swaying in the gentle breeze, enhance the serenity of this noble institution. Beyond these deep mysterious woods lie the well-traveled sidewalks leading to the world of knowledge and enlightenment. The solid mass of red brick, fortified by the sturdy support of immobile steel beams, provides the perfect atmosphere for scholarly pursuits. The exact precision with which this concrete well-planned foundation is designed prevents even the most attentive student from escaping into a world of deeper fantasy. Tick, tick, tick, tick, tick, tick, — tick tock. It is seven o'clock, and the desolate halls are seemingly uninhabited. (Thundering organ vibrates)

Quivering with apprehension, Priscilla Pinkerton, the dedicated young home-economics' student, and Butch Bradley, the All-American football, basketball, croquet, baseball, soccer, T.V. tag, wrestling, ice skating, jump rope, tennis, golf, hockey, old maid, cross-country, marbles, boxing, tiddlie winks, archery, karate, fencing, swimming, badminton, mountain climbing, ghostie-ghostie, exchange worried glances, fearfully dreading unexpected intruders. Unknown to them, Mabel "the mouth" is lurking among the lockers, taking notes on their every move. "Such a discovery," thinks Mabel with wild excitement. "It'll be the most shocking incident to hit Riverwood since the cafeteria served filet mignon and sauteed mushrooms for lunch." Mabel's eyes gleam, and she begins to giggle and shake deliriously. The dumbfounded couple panic, realizing that they are being watched. Mortified, Priscilla makes a mad dash for the powder room, and Butch frantically sprints down the now illuminated hall dodging and darting the few who dare to block his path. Hearing the roar of early morning chorus, Mabel stops her insane chuckling long enough to realize it is eight o'clock, and school will soon begin. She waddles down the hall murmuring to herself, "Oh Buffy, you poor innocent child. I've got the most earth-shattering news to tell you . . ."

It doesn't take long for the scoop concerning the "Odd Couple" to spread throughout Riverwood. Some students are astonished, others are flabbergasted, and many are just plain stunned

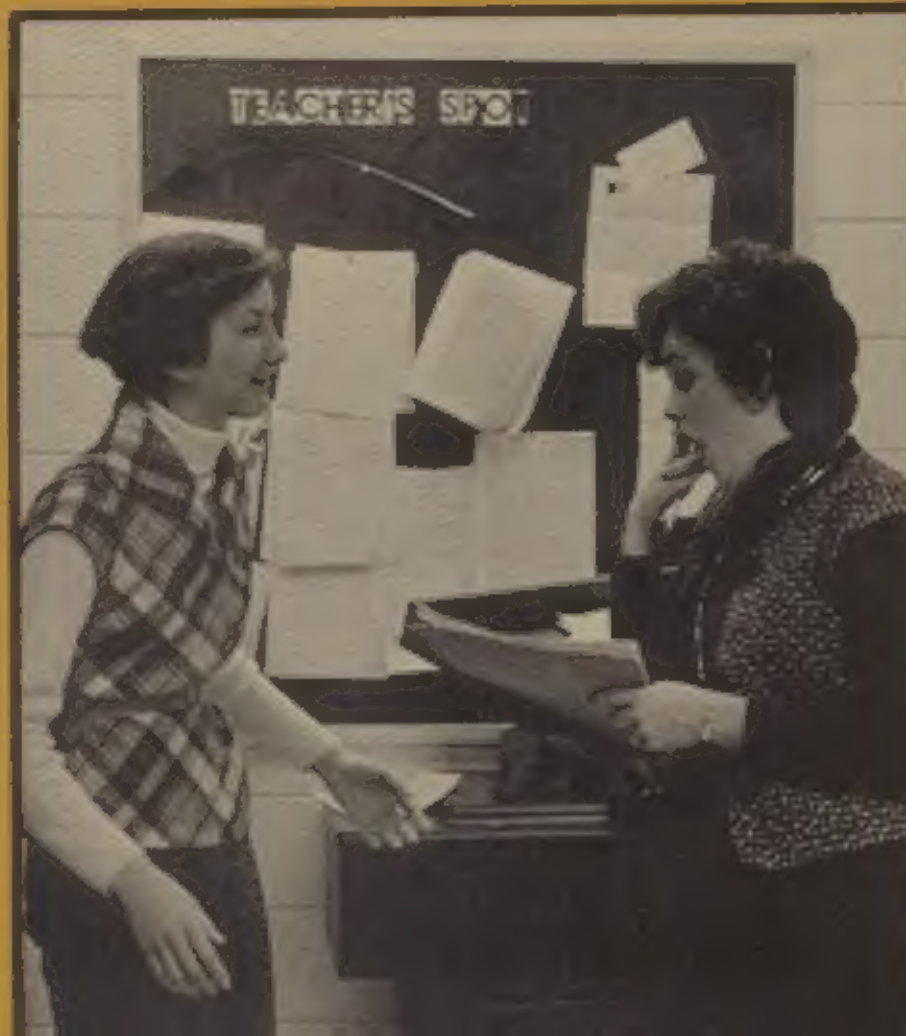

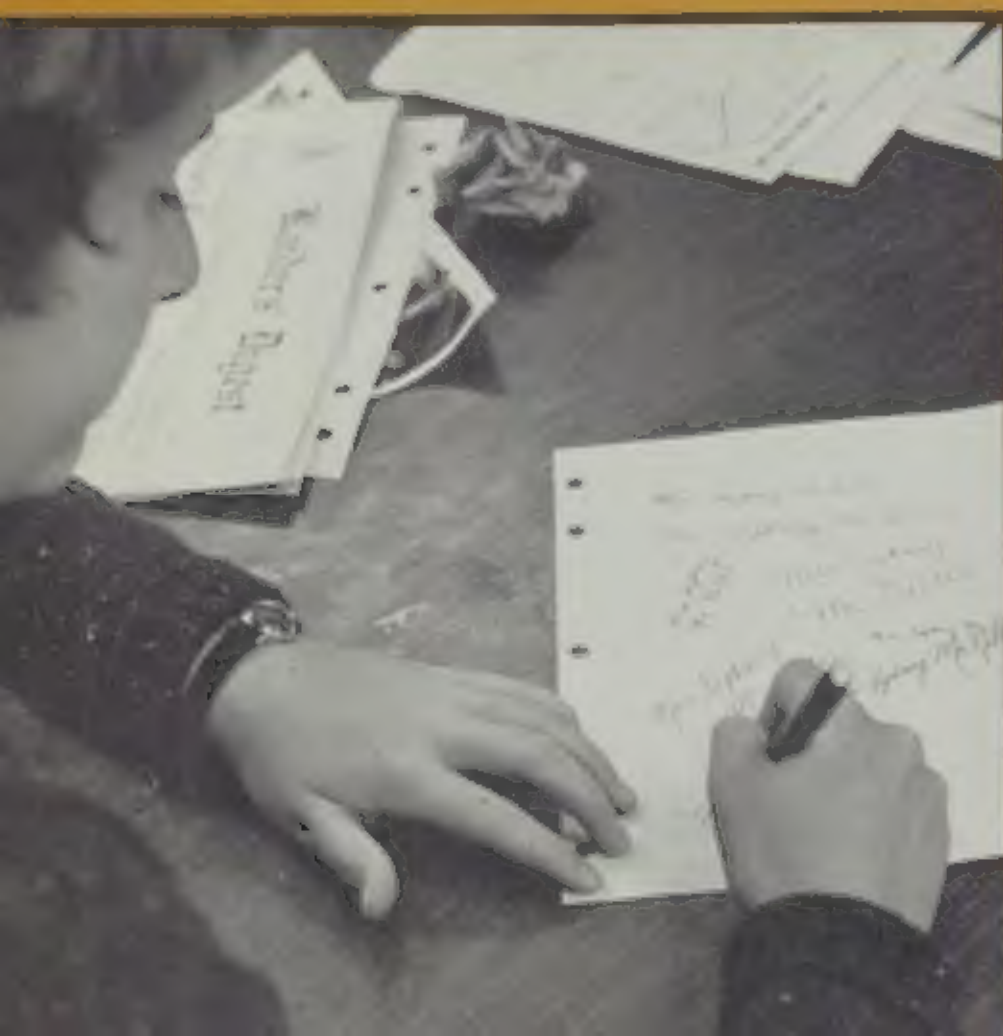

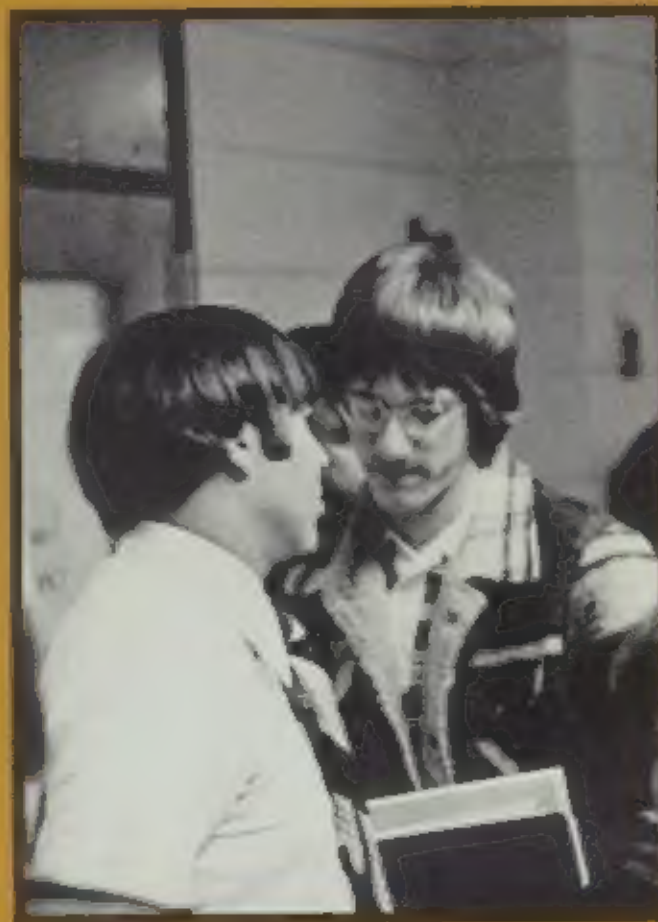

Amongst the confusion, Buffy Brady, "star cheerleader, social butterfly, and teacher's pet" is surrounded by gorgeous muscular males. As Mabel arrives at the scene, she blurts, "Buffy, I hate to have to be the one to tell you the bad news about Butch and Priscilla . . ." Buffy bursts into hysterical sobs. "My love! My life! My reputation!" Her eyes well with tears, but behind her lovely lashes thoughts flash through her mind — "I'll get you yet my pretties." Alas, poor Buffy, fair and lovely young maiden, gently crashes to the floor.

Dashing to the rescue, our hero, Albert Academia Meriweather III has found the golden opportunity to test his skills in paramedics. Kneeling at the side of Buffy, he reaches for his little red Otasco Medical Kit. Placing his plastic stethoscope on her head, he diagnoses her case as acute eczema of the psoriasis. "I strongly recommend immediate treatment," remarks Albert in a sophisticated tone of voice.

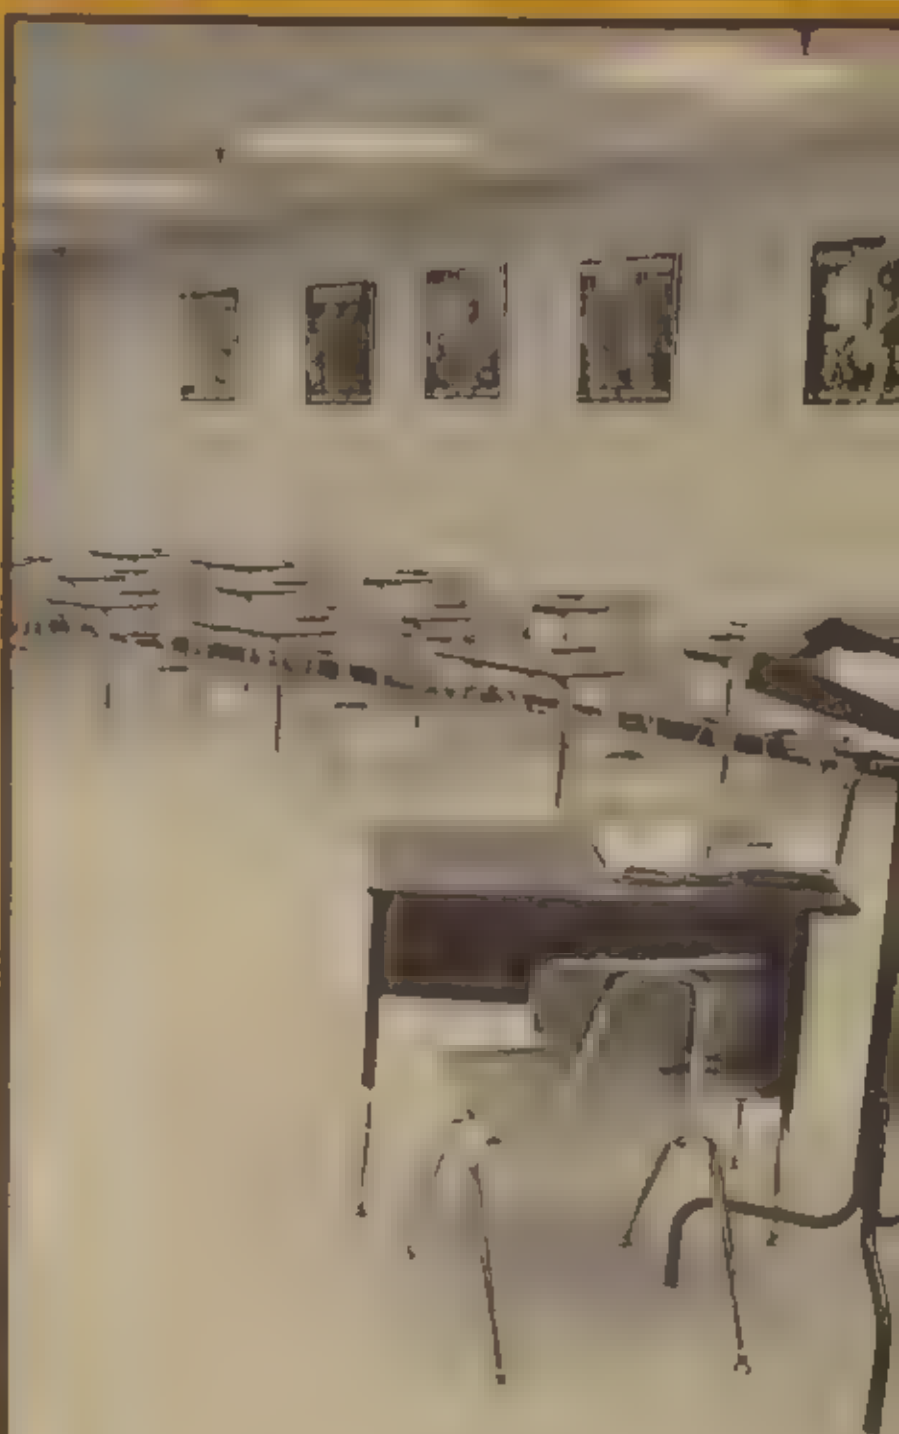

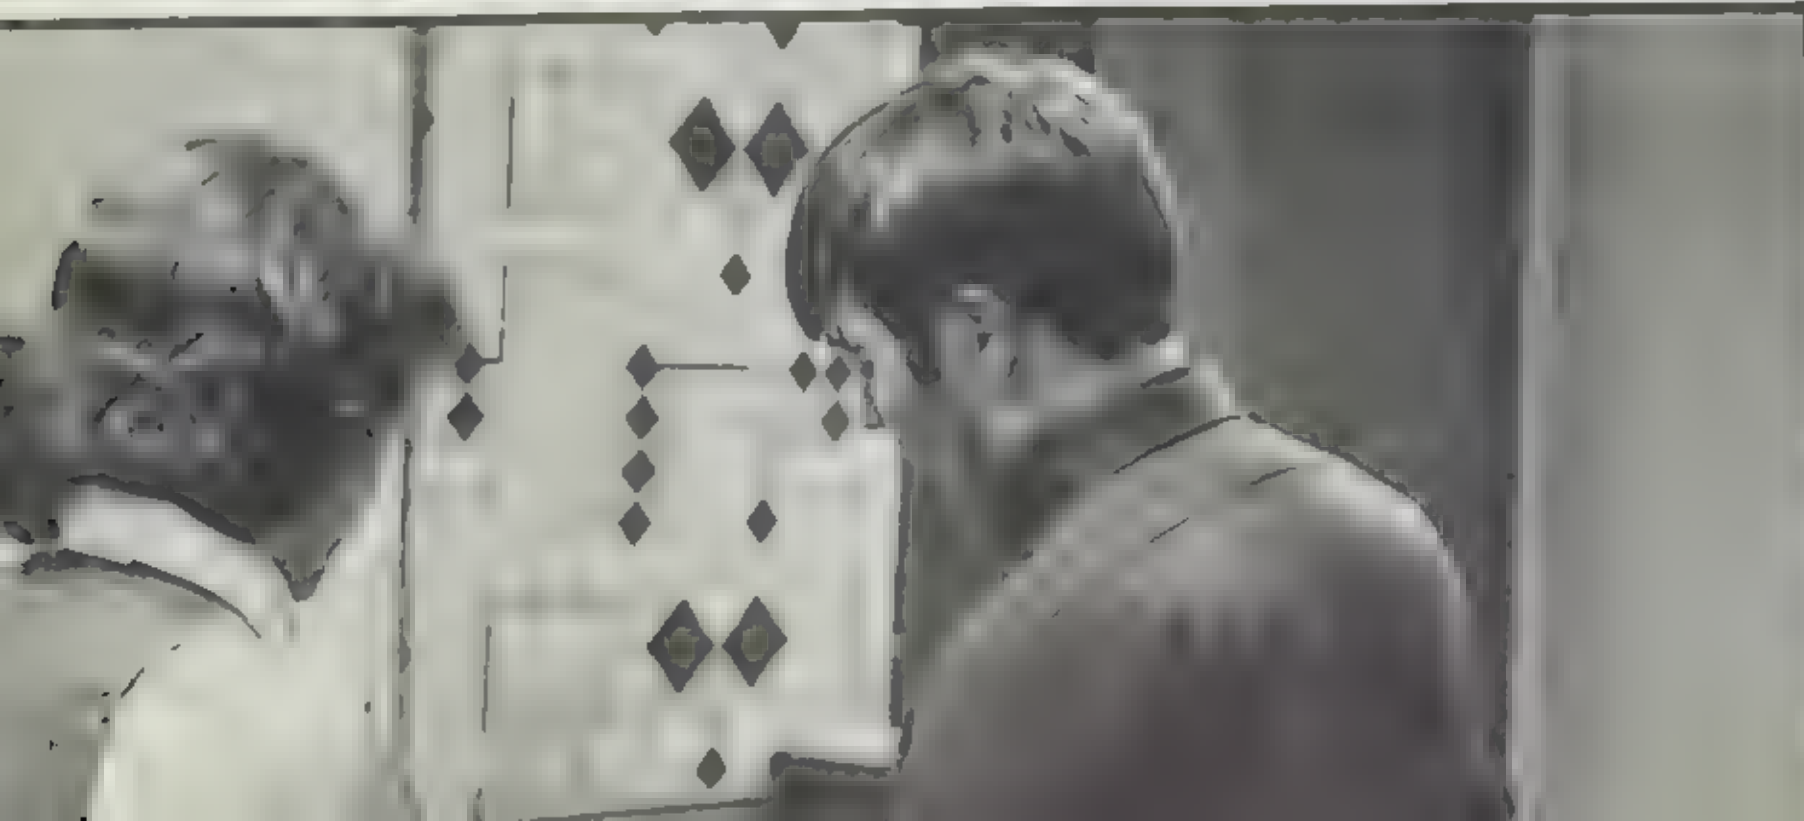

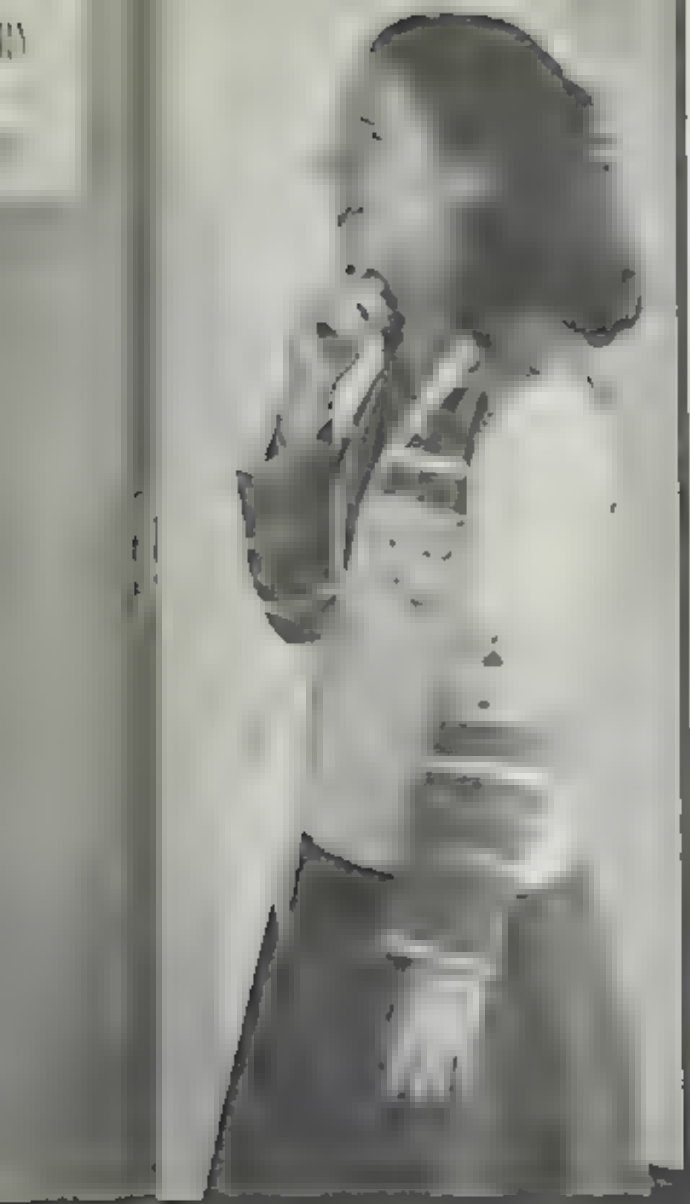

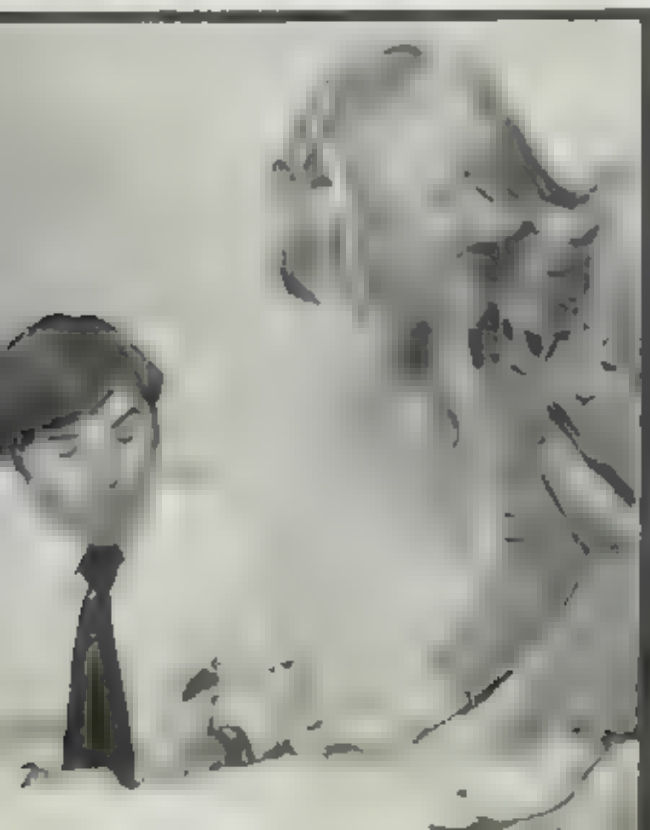

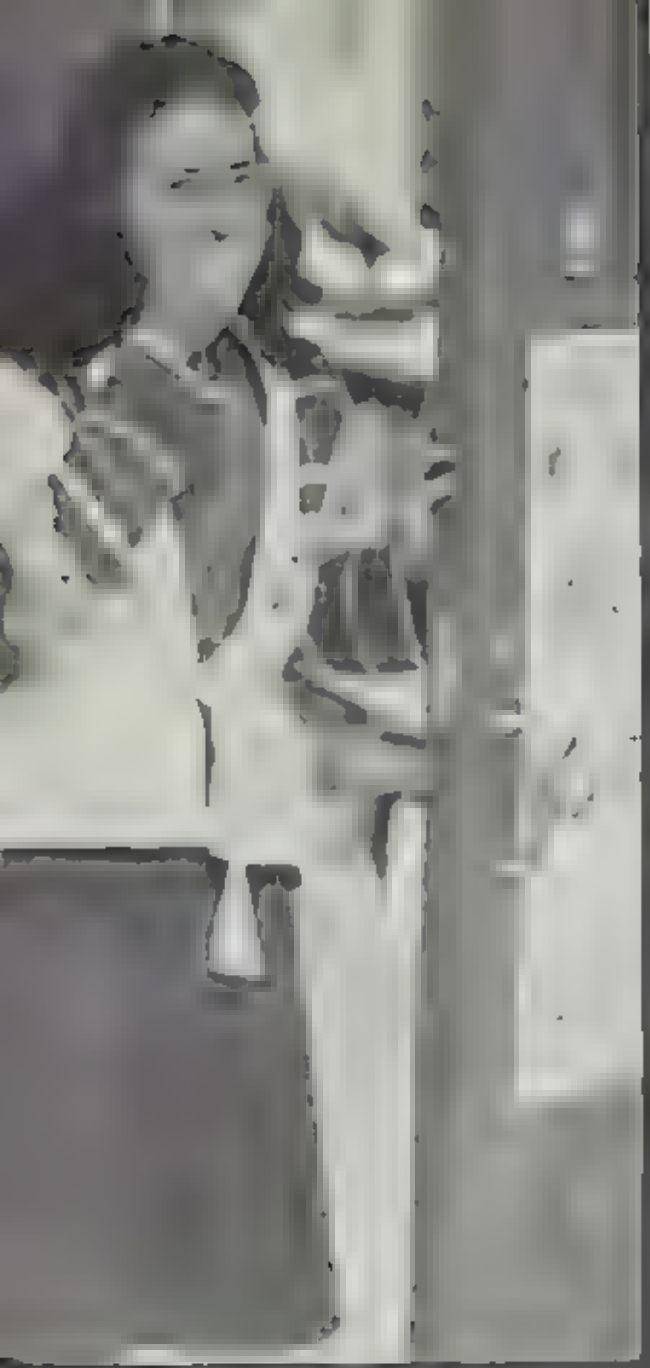

The halls are filled with pushing, shoving, and mass confusion. Locker period has begun. The homeroom bell rings, and Miss Thelma Finster enters her classroom, cherishing the moment when she poetically recites The Roli To her dismay, not a single voice responds. However, she derives strange pleasure from carefully marking each "x" with perfect precision

Strolling leisurely into the room, Bernie Carroway, a patron of the smoking area and a lifetime Visine addict, says, "Hi." "Bernie, are you here for homeroom, or do you need extra help on your bubble sheet for pre-registration?" questions Miss Finster. "Wow ... I thought it was a nightmare, but I guess this is school." "Don't you think I deserve a logical explanation for your extreme tardiness?" pleads Miss Finster in a high-pitched monotone. "Well, if you really wanna know

Clarence Cleghorn Jr. eighth grader, fresh from H.F. Underniece Elementary races down the hall eagerly anticipating the challenge of Health 101. Meanwhile hidden in the dark recesses of the staircase Reggie Rampage the well known trouble maker on campus complete with trench coat and dark glasses awaits his victim. His eyes are searching, betraying sinister thoughts of (trumpet fanfare) EIGHTH GRADE INTIMIDATION! Clarence is innocently bouncing down the hall when he loses his grasp on his precious Georgia History notebook. Reggie grabs him viciously by the collar. Hey kid this is your last and only chance to purchase the deluxe privilege pass which includes admission to pep rallies, the indoor swimming pools, telephones, elevators, escalators, all fifty two chorale concerts, detention, smoking area, teachers lounge, movies, the playground and breakfast in the cafeteria. Clarence with a slight grin and a twinkle in his eye astounds the high regarded con-man with a swift karate chop to the jaw. Let this be a lesson to you malicious evildoer not to practice your pranks and hoaxes on unsuspecting eighth graders. Clarence does not feel for this deceitful character therefore he disregards Reggie's insincere pleas. With pride and defiance Clarence exclaims. Innocent people will no longer be subject to your taunts and torments they may now walk the halls without the fear of being jumped, locked in a locker, or hung from the sprinkling system.

One of the goals of education is self fulfillment. Happiness and spontaneity should be found in every classroom. The student should be allowed to learn at his own rate. The school can become an enjoyable place when individual freedom is given naturally. The student made responsible for his own education will explore and discover himself as well as the subject material. No one respects that which he fears. As long as the student does not encroach upon the freedom of others, punishment is not necessary. A teacher should treat the student with dignity and as an equal. An environment of trust promotes creativity, not destructiveness. The school where teachers and students care about each other will encourage growth and learning on both sides.

Flexibility is the key word concerning the daily routine and curriculum. Modular scheduling is an innovative approach to the problem of monotony. A much wider variety of subjects can be explored in a school day. The length of the study blocs range from fifteen to sixty minutes. Independent or group study is emphasized as a means of acceleration. Unscheduled time can occupy thirty to forty percent of the student's program. This time can be used for completion of assignments or concentration on an area of special interest — perhaps even teaching a mini-course in his favorite subject. The self-directed student becomes involved in and excited by the learning process.

The word "school" should not refer to just the building but the entire community. The traditional field trip is a starting point, however, the resources of the community are so great that the educational system must take advantage of them. All citizens should take an active interest in the educational process.

School should be success-oriented. It is a chilling fact that students can be told that they have failed. The function of grades can be changed from that of an end to a means of evaluation. One of the best systems is the "pass" and "not passed yet" program examined by Silberman's Crisis in the Classroom. Teachers and students, as partners, formulate a contract. Requirements are agreed upon at the beginning of the course, and the contract can be renegotiated. An unfair grade, by the student's standards, can be appealed. Tests are feedback where problem areas can be uncovered, and teachers can measure their effect on the class. The choice of what to study is given to the student. He feels accepted and valued — successful.

The Key Club represents the Kiwanis Educate Youth program. It is a community service organization and all the activities are community-related. The Meriden Kiwanis Club hold their meeting once per week and two representatives from each of the local high schools attend and take an active part in the agenda topics. At the end of the school year a large convention is held for competition between students from different areas throughout New England.

The Student Council is the voice of the school. Representatives gather up the complaints and suggestions from the fellow students and present them to the officers. If a problem cannot be settled by the President and Advisor, then it is brought before the Director who helps find a solution. The primary objective of the Student Council is to represent the student body.

The National Honor Society begins to select candidates after the third marking period. To be considered, students must be sophomores, juniors or seniors and must have stayed on the honor roll for four consecutive terms. Candidates are judged on leadership, character and service in the school. Members take an active part throughout the school year to raise money for scholarships. Events like ushering for Open House, holding Bake Sales, Car Washes and conducting raffles are some of the activities that NHS members participate in. NHS also runs the Adult Education Evening School Canteen three nights a week. Members must maintain their B or better averages.

THE DRAMA TECH PROGRAM

Relates trade technology to theatre technique. They combine their skills to sponsor a talent show at the end of the school year. Demonstrations by theatre people are put on three times a year to give students an idea of what theatre is about. Once a month the club goes to see a play at the Hartford Stage Company and Drama Tech students get a special discount. The shows are enjoyable and educational. After the plays, the students may discuss different topics with the actors, actresses, and technicians. The Drama Tech Coordinator, not pictured is Mrs. Mary Brooks.
